RAVEN FROM HOUSE APUKALYPSE

September 22, 2026

From the high seat of House Apukalypse, hear the accounting of the second week of war.

Let us begin with our own wound, since a judge who hides his bruises is no judge at all. Dirty Musty Steinman, routed and left for carrion in Week One, rose from the mud with fifty-seven more points than they had the week before and put 135.68 against our 115.68. Twenty points, taken from us in our own hall. We scored sixth-best in all the realm and still walked off the field beaten, which is a cruel joke only the gods can tell. Steinman now holds the highest score of the week and is a rising star in the West, though they may be counting their banners early — Squire Jake Ferguson went down in the fourth, and we would not wish that on any house, even the one that just bled us. Here's hoping the word from their maester is kind.

North Augusta Gypsies committed the week's true slaughter, 129.62 to 69.52, sixty points of daylight over the Kegorators. There is no siege to describe here; there was no wall. The Kegorators were crownless before the horns even sounded — Lord Jaxson Dart left in the first quarter and never came back, and Lord Caleb Williams, that famous king in the cellar who scored thirty-seven for no one at all in Week One, walked off in the fourth. Two kings lost in a single afternoon. Fill their cups and pray for better news.

The Good Ole Boys took Beer n Deer apart by 53.30, 126.36 to 73.06, and that is a kindness in the telling, because Beer n Deer finished forty-four points beneath what the omens promised them. Once again Cannoneer Brandon Aubrey stood alone in the rubble with seventeen points, the finest kicker in the realm serving the deadest house in it — hero of a lost siege, twice now. Someone ought to ransom him.

In the West, The Drunk Monks kept their quiet knives sharp, felling Aboriginal Men 135.26 to 115.44 behind Knight Jonathan Taylor's 29.20. The Monks are 2-0 with 297.06 points, the most in the league, and still nobody says their name at feasts. The Aboriginal Men, meanwhile, are 0-2 despite scoring 252 on the season — the unluckiest ledger in the war — and they lost Lord Jayden Daniels in the second quarter. A house can be strong and cursed at once.

House Stark rode into team marshall's camp as the underdog and left with 131.82 to 110.88, and the curse of the fractional Week One death is broken. Swordsman "The Winter Hawk" Jaxon Smith-Njigba was the sword that did it, 42.50 points, the best individual performance in the realm this week and the second-best hoard of the young season. The Shield Wall of the Rams added eleven more. And still — Lord Jared Goff sat on the bench in his furs and posted 29.78 for no one, proof that Stark's unplayed men are as dangerous as their starters. Team marshall fought honorably; Squire Travis Kelce's 25.10 was the finest work by any squire in the field, but it bought them nothing.

Member Berries beat Waelde's Underage Grooming Academy 102.92 to 86.58 — and note that the Academy sent word this week, fielded actual men, and lost anyway, which is progress of a sort. The Berries dropped forty-five points from their opening feast and lost Swordsman DJ Moore in the second quarter, but Lord "The Storm King" Josh Allen thundered for 40.82, best of all quarterbacks and top lord in the realm at 76.48, and the rookie Swordsman Denzel Boston added 20.50 in his first real bleeding. Two and oh is two and oh, however ugly the ride.

Last, the upset: Robert Dibble took the Gatlinburg Mountaineers 100.20 to 85.48, a seventeen-point swing against the projections, and did it while ranking tenth of fourteen in scoring. Luckiest win of the week, and they may keep it — luck spends the same as skill.

Four banners fly at 2-0: The Monks, Good Ole Boys, Gypsies, Berries. Four houses sit at 0-2 and can already smell the winter.

The board is set. Play better, or be written about.
