RAVEN FROM HOUSE APUKALYPSE

October 6, 2026

From the high seat of House Apukalypse, where we curse the name of Eli Peterson:

Four weeks of war, and the realm has begun to sort itself into the quick and the dead. Let it be recorded that we write this week with ash in our mouths, for our own banners came down in the bloodiest field of the war — but we have never lied to you before and we will not start now.

Begin in the west, where Dirty Musty Steinman rode onto team marshall's ground as a coin-flip and left with a 132.92 to 89.14 slaughter. The architect was Swordsman "The Carolina Kraken" Tetairoa McMillan, who was measured for fifteen points and instead put forty-five on the board — a number that will be sung about long after the rest of us are bones. Marshall's answer was Swordsman Rashee Rice, who scored nothing at all due to an injury, a silence louder than any horn. Cannoneer Will Reichard's nineteen points from the siege line were the only honorable thing on that side of the field.

At the Grooming Academy (Pause), word was finally sent — a one-line scroll reading seventy points, we tried. Beer n Deer, long the realm's doormat, found a spine and a 120.78 to 70.96 victory behind Swordsman Malik Nabers and his twenty-three, while Swordsman Emeka Egbuka managed three and a third. The Academy stands 0-4 with the smallest treasury in the Seven Kingdoms. Someone light a candle for them, or at least a torch.

The Drunk Monks remain the quiet ones holding the knife. They scored only eighth-best in the realm this week and still walked out of North Augusta with a 114.7 to 97.4 win, Knight Chuba Hubbard carrying the load for nearly twenty-six while Swordsman Ladd McConkey contributed a perfect, pristine zero. Four wins, no losses, and not a word spoken. The Gypsies can at least claim the finest Shield Wall of the week, their Seattle men-at-arms taking twelve, but a good wall does not win a war on its own.

The cruelest news comes from the Member Berries' hall. Favored at home, they were put to the sword 124.66 to 70.12 — the week's largest blowout and a fifty-five point collapse from last week's showing. Knight Javonte Williams ran for thirty-one in Gatlinburg colors, but the wound that mattered was Swordsman Ja'Marr Chase leaving the field in the second quarter and never coming back. Five points from a man projected for twenty. Here's hoping the Berries get good news on that raven; no house should win a crown that way, and Gatlinburg did not need the help.

The Kegorators' curse deepens. Knight Saquon Barkley went down in the opening quarter and did not return, two points to his name, and so another king falls in that cellar beside Dart and Williams. Swordsman Tee Higgins fought like a man possessed for twenty-seven and it bought them nothing — Robert Dibble took it 127.38 to 112.28, and Dibble did it after losing Lord Lamar Jackson in the second quarter himself. Winning shorthanded is its own kind of omen. Kegorators stand 0-4.

House Stark, cursed by fractions for two seasons, has learned to win by hands instead. They held off The Good Ole Boys 115.88 to 106.72 behind Knight Kenneth Walker III's thirty-one, and a rookie, Swordsman Carnell Tate, slipped twenty-one onto the board from nowhere. Swordsman Garrett Wilson's five nearly undid it all. Three straight wins now for the North, and Swordsman "The Winter Hawk" Jaxon Smith-Njigba continues to lead all men in the realm for the season.

And then our own field. We put up 152.1 — Knight Kyren Williams ran for 36.7, Squire Sam LaPorta took 22.4, and backup Knight Kyle Monangai added twenty-eight points from our bench, where they did us no good whatsoever. We lost anyway, 166.48 to 152.1, because Swordsman CeeDee Lamb put forty-one points through our gate for the Aboriginal Men, who are no longer strong and cursed, merely strong. Knight Cam Skattebo's seven did not help. We bend the knee to the better score and nothing else.

The Monks sit alone atop the realm. The rest of us sharpen.

Until the next raven,

House Apokalypse
